APPENDIX — TABLES A-1

INTRODUCTION

This document provides an overview, as of January 2012, of existing state anti-bullying laws, pending state and federal anti-bullying legislation, and other relevant federal and state laws. It is meant to inform the discussion of legal policy issues around bullying, in particular at the Symposium on Youth Meanness and Cruelty being held at Harvard Law School on February 29, 2012 as part of the Kinder & Braver World Project.

This document, including the Tables in Appendix 1, was created by analyzing the anti-bullying laws of the 48 states with such laws, as well as reviewing pending legislation and related laws.¹ The document and tables break out provisions of the state statutes that the authors consider important to engender positive cross-disciplinary discussion at the Symposium. The language in the state statutes is incredibly varied and complex, and this area of the law is constantly evolving. Many additional areas of inquiry are sure to arise at the Symposium and beyond. Thus, this document is a working draft. If you would like to provide feedback, please contact kbw-feedback@cyber.law.harvard.edu.

I. OVERVIEW OF EXISTING STATE ANTI-BULLYING LEGISLATION

As of January 2012, 48 states had enacted legislation requiring school districts to adopt policies regarding bullying.² The first of these laws was passed in 1999, partly in response to the Columbine shootings.³ The most recent was passed in Michigan in December of 2011.⁴ In the meantime, as new laws were passed, many of the original laws were amended. The legal landscape continues to develop and changes quickly.

Some state anti-bullying laws contain provisions modifying criminal laws or creating new crimes aimed at bullying, and, as discussed in Sections II and III below, there are many existing and pending laws that criminalize some bullying behaviors. For the most part, however, the anti-bullying laws discussed in Part I of this document focus on the responsibilities of schools to address bullying. They typically prescribe a minimum of what schools district policies must ¹The laws were identified by consulting secondary sources, including the list of citations provided in Appendix B of the United States Department of Education's ("DOE") Analysis of State Bullying Laws and Policies, and updating those sources as of January, 2012. See U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., ANALYSIS OF STATE BULLYING LAWS AND POLICIES (2011) [hereinafter DOE Report]; see also Sameer Hinduja & Justin W. Patchin, A Brief Review of State Cyberbullying Laws and Policies, CYBERBULLYING RES. CENTER (Jan. 2012), http://www.cyberbullying.us/Bullying_and_Cyberbullying_Laws.pdf.

² South Dakota and Montana do not have anti-bullying bills as addressed in this document, nor does the District of Columbia. See Section II below for information on legislation pending in those states. Note that these states do have some laws related to bullying. For example, the District of Columbia's Municipal Code does include "[b]ullying, or using humiliating, or intimidating language or behavior, including Internet Bullying" in its list of behaviors that "[i]n addition to lesser consequences, . . . may result in either on-site or off-site Suspension." D.C. MUN. REGS. tit. 5, § 5-B2502 (2012).

contain with regard to bullying, leaving other decisions to the districts or individual schools, though they often provide for the state department of education or similar body to come up with a model policy as guidance.⁵

The content and level of detail in the laws varies greatly. Some states (for example, Hawaii, Maine, and New Mexico) have brief requirements for school districts or other relevant bodies to develop policies. The more complex laws have many provisions, each law different from the other. Most of the laws go well beyond research-based definitions of bullying to encompass a wide range of behaviors, often borrowing and modifying language from legal definitions of harassment. Overall, they tend to emphasize the investigation of bullying incidents, consequences for bullies, and reporting systems for schools to districts or to the state. With differing levels of precision, they also include education for students, staff and, in some instances, families. Few states provide any reference to funding sources to help schools implement the procedures, responses, and education the laws envision.

A. The Definitions of Bullying in State Law

- Most, but not all, states provide definitions of bullying for districts to use in their policies:
 - 41 states provide statutory definitions of bullying or similar behaviors.
 - 5 states (Hawaii, Maine, New Mexico, Virginia, and Wisconsin) leave the definition of bullying to the discretion of the state department of education or similar entity, requiring that a definition be included in the state’s model bullying policy developed by the state department of education or similar body.
 - 2 states (Arizona and Minnesota) leave the definition of bullying entirely up to local school districts.
- These definitions vary greatly. According to DOE, “[s]ome state laws focus on specific actions (e.g., physical, verbal, or written), some focus on the intent or motivation of the aggressor, others focus on the degree and nature of harms that are inflicted on the victim, and many address multiple factors. In many instances, minor language, omitted or inserted into laws, can significantly alter the way in which the behavior and circumstances are legally defined (e.g., inclusion of the terms ‘physical,’ ‘overt,’ or ‘repeated’).”⁶
- The laws do not follow research-based definitions of bullying. According to DOE, “[r]esearchers have traditionally defined bullying as a repeated pattern of aggressive behavior that involves an imbalance of power and that purposefully inflicts harm on the bullying victim.”⁷
 - Repeated Pattern: 8 states define bullying only as encompassing behaviors that are repetitive, systematic, or continuous, while 5 states define bullying to encompass only

⁵ See DOE Report, supra note 1, at 47–57.

⁶ DOE Report, supra note 1, at 25.

⁷ DOE Report, supra note 1, at 1 (citations omitted).

- severe or pervasive conduct (see Table 1).
- Intent to harm: 16 states define bullying to encompass only behaviors that are intended to harm another (note that 7 states define bullying to encompass only behaviors that a “reasonable person” should have known would harm another) (see Table 2).
 - Power differential: 4 states provide some treatment of power differential or imbalance between aggressor and target (see Table 3):
 - 1 state (Texas) defines bullying to require a power imbalance;
 - 2 states (Delaware and New Hampshire) recognize the role played by a power differential or imbalance in their definitions;
 - 1 state (Massachusetts) recognizes the role played by a power differential in its prescribed professional development on bullying prevention, but not in the anti-bullying law’s definition of bullying.
 - Cyberbullying: 38 states provide some treatment of cyberbullying, or bullying involving electronic acts in their definitions (see Table 4):
 - 34 states include bullying involving electronic acts in the definition of bullying or otherwise define cyberbullying in essentially the same way as bullying.
 - 6 states define cyberbullying more specifically.
 - Differentiating Characteristics: 18 states provide some treatment of targets’ differentiating characteristics (see Table 5).
 - Lists: 16 of these provide a list of characteristics (some exhaustive, others non-exhaustive).
 - The 16 all include these six characteristics: creed or religion, disability, gender or sex, nationality or national origin, race, and sexual orientation.
 - The characteristics of the 16 combined include: academic status; age; ancestry; color; creed; developmental, emotional, learning, mental, physical, or sensory disability; ethnicity; familial status; gender; gender expression or identity; health condition; intellectual ability; marital status; military status; national origin; nationality; need for special education services; obesity; physical appearance; physical attributes; physical or mental ability or disability; political belief; political party preference; race; religion; religious practice; sex; sexual orientation; socioeconomic status; source of income; unfavorable discharge from military service; weight; or association with a person or group with one or more of such differentiating characteristics.
 - How much the characteristics matter: The 18 states addressing characteristics vary on the significance of the characteristics:
 - 1 state (Alabama) requires that bullying be motivated by differentiating characteristics, without providing any list of what the differentiating characteristics must be.
 - 2 states (Iowa and New Jersey) require that bullying be motivated by actual or perceived differentiating characteristics, and provide a non-exclusive list of what the differentiating characteristics could be.

- 2 states (California and Vermont) require that bullying be motivated by actual or perceived differentiating characteristics in some respects but not in others:
 - In California, bullying as defined in the school district’s policy must be motivated by actual or perceived differentiating characteristics, as provided in a non-exhaustive list; however, students may still be subject to suspension or expulsion as a consequence for bullying even if it is not motivated by such characteristics.
 - In Vermont, harassment must be motivated by actual or perceived differentiating characteristics, as provided in an exhaustive list; however, bullying need not be motivated by such characteristics.
- 11 states recognize the role of differentiating characteristics, and provide a non-exclusive list of differentiating characteristics.
- 1 state (Mississippi) recognizes the role of differentiating characteristics without providing any list of differentiating characteristics.
- 1 state (Missouri) explicitly prohibits school districts from outlining, in their bullying policies, specific lists of differentiating characteristics.
- Laws in 6 states (Florida, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Utah) contain language that all students are to be treated equally under the bullying policies (see Table 6).
- Interchangeability of “Bullying” and “Harassment”
 - The varying treatment of differentiating characteristics may be because, according to DOE, “[t]he legislative language used in crafting bullying laws often borrows directly from harassment statutes. This has frequently led to a conflation of terms used to define prohibited conduct, with ‘bullying’ and ‘harassment’ often used interchangeably in laws, despite their important legal distinctions. Harassment is distinguishable from more general forms of bullying in that it must be motivated by characteristics of the targeted victim. It is generally viewed as a subset of more broadly defined bullying behavior. Harassment also violates federal civil rights laws as a form of unlawful discrimination.”⁸
 - For an overview of how the laws treat these terms, see Table 6A.
- Other factors:
 - 2 states (Mississippi and Texas) explicitly allow students to engage in reasonable self-defense against bullying (see Table 7).
 - 1 state (California) incorporates students with disabilities into the “reasonable pupil” aspect of its definition (see Table A1, at end of Tables).
- Off-Campus: The laws vary in what they say about whether they can cover bullying that ⁸ DOE Report, supra note 1, at 17 (citations omitted).

occurs off-campus (see Table 8), an issue that also implicates the First Amendment to the United States Constitution (see Section III.A. below):

- 14 states limit their reach to behaviors that occur at school or other school-related locations.
- 7 states limit their reach to behaviors that occur at school or at other school-related locations, or that use school-owned technology.
- 9 states are ambiguous but seem broad enough to reach some off-campus behaviors.
- 11 states explicitly allow schools to reach at least some bullying behaviors that occur outside the school context, as long as certain conditions are satisfied.

B. Process and Response

1. Procedures to Be Adopted by School Districts

- According to DOE, “state legislation . . . emphasize[s] traditional approaches to managing bullying misconduct that involve reporting and investigating bullying complaints and imposing disciplinary actions.”⁹
- Investigations: 32 states require, and 3 states encourage, the creation of school procedures for investigating incidents of bullying (see Table 9).
- Reporting
 - Mandatory reporting of bullying incidents¹⁰ (see Table 10):
 - 17 states require staff to report incidents of bullying they witness or of which they are otherwise aware.
 - 3 of these 17 states (Alaska, Rhode Island, and South Carolina) also require students to report incidents of bullying they witness or of which they are aware.
 - 2 states (Georgia and Wisconsin) encourage school districts to adopt bullying policies that would require staff to report incidents of bullying they witness or of which they are otherwise aware.
 - Anonymous reporting: 11 states require, and 1 state (Georgia) encourages, school procedures that explicitly allow for the anonymous reporting of bullying incidents (see Table 11).
 - Reporting to Law Enforcement: 9 states require school administrators, in certain circumstances, to report incidents of bullying to law enforcement

⁹ DOE Report, supra note 1, at xvi.

¹⁰ Note that in addition, all states have laws that require teachers and school personnel, among others, to report suspected child abuse or neglect under certain circumstances. See generally CHILD WELFARE INFO. GATEWAY, U.S. DEP’T OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVS., MANDATORY REPORTERS OF CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT: SUMMARY OF STATE LAWS (2010), available at http://www.childwelfare.gov/systemwide/laws_policies/statutes/manda.pdf. Many of these laws require reporting when images of children engaged in sexual activity are involved, see id., an issue that also implicates child pornography and sexting laws. See infra note 47.

authorities (see Table 12).¹¹

- Disciplinary Consequences: Laws in 34 states require, and in 2 states encourage, the districts to provide out disciplinary consequences for bullying (see Table 13).
 - Range of Consequences
 - Most states broadly use terms like “disciplinary action,” “disciplinary consequences,” “consequences,” or “consequences and remedial action.”
 - 7 states detail more specific disciplinary consequences:
 - Alaska specifies consequences up to and including expulsion and reporting of criminal activity to law enforcement authorities.
 - California specifies consequences including suspension or expulsion.
 - Georgia specifies consequences including mandatory assignment to an alternative school after three bullying offenses within one school year.
 - Idaho specifies consequences including temporary suspension.
 - Nebraska specifies consequences including suspension, expulsion, or mandatory reassignment.
 - Rhode Island specifies that suspension may not be imposed unless it is deemed a necessary consequence.
 - Texas specifies consequences including classroom or campus transfer.
 - Balancing Discipline with Education (see Table 13A)
 - 2 states (Massachusetts and Rhode Island) specify that disciplinary actions must be balanced with the need to teach appropriate behavior.
 - Age Appropriate consequences or interventions (see Table 13B):¹²
 - 3 states (Arkansas, Georgia, and Missouri) provide that disciplinary consequences can or should be age appropriate.
 - 2 states (Massachusetts and Connecticut) provide for professional development to include developmentally appropriate prevention and intervention strategies.
 - Students with Disabilities: 6 states (Alabama, New Jersey, Oklahoma,

¹¹ Apart from anti-bullying laws, in all states other circumstances may require school administrators to report incidents to law enforcement. For example, in Texas, school officials have a duty to report all crimes occurring on school property or at school functions to law enforcement agencies. See TEX. EDUC. CODE ANN. § 37.015(a) (West 2011). In several states, a student’s possession of a deadly weapon or active involvement in an incident of violent assault also triggers reporting requirements prior to suspension or expulsion, see, e.g., CAL. EDUC. CODE § 48902 (West 2011); MASS. GEN. LAWS ch. 71, § 37L (2011); S.C. CODE ANN. § 59-24-60 (2011); ARK. CODE ANN. § 6-17-113 (2011), as does student conduct encompassing use, possession or distribution of controlled substances. See CAL. EDUC. CODE § 48902 (West 2011); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 14, § 4112 (2011); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 158.154 (West 2011); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 115C-288 (2011).

Pennsylvania, Texas, and Virginia) specifically recognize that treatment of students with disabilities involved in bullying incidents must comply with applicable special education laws (see Table A1).¹³

2. Criminalization of Certain Bullying Behaviors

- Trend towards criminalization: According to DOE, “[r]ecent state legislation and policy addressing school bullying has emphasized an expanded role for law enforcement and the criminal justice system in managing bullying on school campuses. Though historically, authority over youth bullying has fallen almost exclusively under the purview of school systems, legislation governing the consequences for bullying behavior reflects a recent trend toward treating the most serious forms of bullying as criminal conduct that should be handled through the criminal justice system. . . . An increasing number of states also have introduced bullying provisions into their criminal and juvenile justice codes.”¹⁴
- Creating or modifying crimes: the anti-bullying laws in 8 states create or modify crimes to target bullying behaviors (see Table 14).
 - All states have criminal laws that could apply to some bullying behaviors (see Section III.B below).
 - Anti-bullying laws in 3 states create new crimes to target bullying behaviors:
 - Idaho creates the crime of student harassment, intimidation, or bullying.
 - Louisiana and North Carolina creates the crime of cyberbullying (as has Arkansas, but in a separate law).
 - Anti-bullying laws in 5 states modify existing criminal laws to target bullying behaviors:
 - Georgia modifies the crime of disruption or interference with the operation of public schools.

March92011 (discussing IEPs in the context of bullying). In addition, discipline for students with disabilities must be consistent with applicable federal and state laws. See, e.g., 20 U.S.C. §§ 1400 et seq. (West 2011) (Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (“IDEA”)); 34 C.F.R. pt. 300 (2011) (Department of Education regulations regarding IDEA); see generally Building the Legacy: IDEA 2004, DEP’T OF EDUC., <http://idea.ed.gov/explore/home> (last visited January 25, 2012). Under federal law, when behavior is a manifestation of a child’s disability, certain procedures must be followed prior to removing the child from his or her current placement — which includes removal via in- or out-of-school suspension. See generally Annotation, Requisite Conditions and Appropriate Factors Affecting Educational Placement of Handicapped Children, 23 A.L.R.4TH 740 §§ 6[a], 6[b] (1983) (summarizing cases that address discipline of students with disabilities); IDEA — Regulations: Discipline, DEP’T OF EDUC.,

¹⁴ DOE Report, supra note 1, at 19-20.

- Kentucky modifies the crimes of harassment.
- Massachusetts modifies the crimes of: stalking; criminal harassment; intimidation of witnesses, jurors and persons furnishing information in connection with criminal proceedings; and annoying telephone calls or electronic communications.
- Missouri modifies the crimes of harassment and stalking.
- Nevada modifies the crime of threatening to cause bodily harm or death to pupil or school employee by means of oral, written or electronic communication.

3. Counseling or Other Support Services As a Response to Bullying (see Table 15)

- Laws in 14 states require, and in 2 states encourage, that the provision of counseling or other support services, or referral to such services, be included in the school districts' policies as a possible response to an incident of bullying.
 - 1 state (Arizona) envisions counseling for targets only.
 - 3 states (Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Georgia) envision counseling for aggressors only.
 - 7 states (California, Connecticut, Florida, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, and Rhode Island) envision counseling for both aggressors and targets.
 - 2 states (Maryland and Texas) envision counseling for both aggressors and targets, as well as for any witnesses to incidents.
 - 3 states (New York, Tennessee, and Pennsylvania) leave it ambiguous as to which students should be provided with or referred to counseling.

4. Accountability of Schools and School Districts

- Reporting of bullying incidents, or of statistics summarizing such incidents (see Table 16):¹⁵
 - 16 states require schools or school districts to report bullying incidents, or statistics summarizing such incidents, to the state department of education or similar body.
 - 3 states (Iowa, Michigan, and Ohio) require schools to report bullying incidents, or statistics summarizing such incidents, to the school district.
 - 1 state (Pennsylvania) requires annual reporting of violent incidents, among others, which must include whether the student has an individualized education plan, and if so, the type of disability (see Table A1).

- Policy Review: 20 states require school districts to provide their bullying policies to the state department of education or similar body, to enable review for compliance with bullying laws (see Table 17).
 - Of these, 8 states explicitly contemplate periodic (as opposed to one-time) review of school district bullying policies.
- Student Involvement: 16 states require, and 2 states encourage, involvement of students in the process of developing the school district’s bullying policy (see Table 18).

C. Educational Provisions

1. Education for Students

- Laws in 40 states contemplate some form of bullying education or prevention programs for students, while laws in 8 states (Arizona, Hawaii, Idaho, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Missouri, and Wisconsin) do not refer to education or prevention programs.
 - Brief requirements: Laws in 17 states have a brief section requiring (in 11 states) or encouraging (in 6 states) some form of bullying prevention education for students (see Table 19).
 - For example, in Nebraska, “each school district . . . shall develop and adopt a policy concerning bullying prevention and education for all students.” Neb. Rev. St. § 79-2,137(3).
 - More comprehensive requirements: Laws in 13 states go further by requiring (in 10 states) or encouraging (in 3 states) more comprehensive forms of education aimed at preventing bullying, including character education and evidence-based best practices (see Table 20).
 - 1 state (Alabama) requires both character education and evidence-based best practices.
 - 4 states (Georgia, New Jersey, New York, and Virginia) require, and 1 state (Minnesota) encourages, character education.
 - 5 states (Connecticut, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Hampshire, and Texas) require, and 2 states (Colorado and Pennsylvania) encourage, evidence-based best practices.
 - 1 state (Massachusetts) additionally encourages social and emotional learning curricula.
 - 1 state (Massachusetts) additionally integrates bullying prevention education into students’ special education programs (see Table A1).
 - Ambiguous requirements: Laws in a 6 states require, and in 4 states encourage, bullying prevention programs, which could be interpreted to mean some form of bullying education for students (see Table 21).

2. Training and Professional Development for Staff (see Table 22)

- Bullying Prevention: Laws in 16 states require, and in 6 states encourage, schools or school districts to provide staff training or professional development on bullying prevention.
 - The required or encouraged training ranges from very broad “bullying prevention” training, to very specific and prescriptive outlines of what must be included in any training program.
- District Policy: Laws in 10 states require, and in 1 state (Alaska) encourage, schools or school districts to provide staff training or professional development on the school district’s bullying policy.

3. Education for Parents (see Table 23)

- District Policy: Nearly every state requires informing parents of the district’s bullying policy.
- Broader Education: In addition, laws in 9 states require, and in 7 states encourage, schools or school districts to provide bullying education or prevention programs for parents. Like the other provisions, the language in these provisions varies. For example:
 - New Hampshire refers to “preventing, identifying, responding to, and reporting incidents of bullying or cyberbullying.”
 - Massachusetts refers to “informing parents and guardians about the bullying prevention curriculum of the school district or school and shall include, but not be limited to: (i) how parents and guardians can reinforce the curriculum at home and support the school district or school plan; (ii) the dynamics of bullying; and (iii) online safety and cyber-bullying.

D. Funding for Implementation of Anti-Bullying Legislation (see Table 24)

- Identify a Funding Source: 11 states identify a source of funding to assist school districts in satisfying the various mandates imposed by state bullying laws.
 - 6 of those states provide for appropriations, while 5 rely on private donations.
 - In 1 state (California), the law indicates that the legislature intended to provide funding, but it is unclear whether funding was actually provided.
 - In 2 additional states (Delaware and Florida), sources of funding (for discipline improvement and safe schools programs) were established prior to the passage of bullying laws, but the bullying laws make the continued disbursement of those funds contingent on the school district’s adoption and implementation of satisfactory bullying policies.
 - 2 states (Colorado and Nevada) establish grant programs for bullying prevention, but do not provide for appropriations and instead expect private donations to provide funds for the grant programs.
- Threats to Cut General Funding: 1 state (Georgia) threatens to cut off part of the school districts' general state funding for failure to comply with the bullying law.

- Report Required: Massachusetts provides that the state department education “shall issue a report detailing cost-effective ways to implement the professional development requirements” of the law, and that the report, with cost estimates, be given to the legislative committees responsible for education and funding.¹⁶

II. PENDING ANTI-BULLYING BILLS AND AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING BILLS

A. Pending Legislation in South Dakota, Montana & the District of Columbia

1. South Dakota

On January 10, 2012, Senate Bill 44 was introduced in the South Dakota Senate by the Committee on the Judiciary at the request of the Office of the Attorney General and was referred to the Senate Committee on Education.¹⁷ The bill would require all school districts without bullying policies to follow a model policy until adopting their own policies. It defines bullying and harassment, and encourages districts to adopt or revise a policy prohibiting bullying and harassment consistent with this language. It also has lists of other “encouraged” provisions and of provisions a district “may” include. A different version of this bill, which would have required each school district to adopt an anti-bullying policy by the end of 2011, was voted down 4-3 by the Senate Education Committee in late January 2011. Senators who opposed that bill did not want to interfere with the local control of school districts.¹⁸

2. Montana

Senate Bill 141 was introduced in January 2011 by Senator Kim Gillan with support of the Montana schools superintendent and the Montana Attorney General.¹⁹ The bill would have required each school district to adopt a policy prohibiting bullying, harassment, or intimidation by August 1, 2012. Failure to implement and enforce an anti-bullying policy would be considered during each school's accreditation review. The bill died in standing committee April

3. The District of Columbia

Bill B19-11, the Bullying and Intimidation Prevention Act of 2011, was introduced in the D.C. Council in January 2011.²³ The legislation would require schools (as well as the parks and recreation department, the D.C. public library, and the University of the District of Columbia) to adopt policies prohibiting bullying, harassment, and intimidation. It would leave much of the content of the policies up to the districts but does set a minimum definition, and would require policies to include reporting procedures, investigatory procedures, a range of responses, and a plan for publicizing the policy. Public hearings on the bill were held in May 2011,²⁴ but no further plans for action appear on the D.C. Council's website.

1. Proposed Federal Bills With Funding Provisions

a) H.R. 83: Bullying Prevention and Intervention Act of 2011

This bill was introduced in the House Judiciary Committee on January 5, 2011 by Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee (Texas) with 54 co-sponsors. It has been referred to Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism, and Homeland Security.

This bill would amend the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 to allow the use of juvenile accountability block grants for bullying prevention and intervention programs; require the Attorney General to establish voluntary guidelines for use by states and local governments in developing such programs; and authorize appropriations for FY2012–FY2016 for the juvenile accountability block grant program.

The bill would require programs receiving funding to focus on the accountability of juveniles for their action, provide counseling services for bullies and victims, address behavior and behavior modification, notify parents, and educate students, adult personnel, and law enforcement officers about how to identify occurrences of bullying and how to address such occurrences. It would allow variations “in order to meet the specific needs or circumstances of relevant populations.”

The bill does not contain language requiring or encouraging grants to be used for broader preventative educational initiatives that can create a better whole-school environment, such as anti-bullying curricula, character education, and social and emotional learning curricula. It also defines bullying very broadly.

b) S.1569: Empowering Local Educational Decisionmaking Act of 2011

This bill was introduced September 15, 2011 by Senator Richard Burr (North Carolina) with 6 co-sponsors. It has been referred to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

This bill proposes changes in grant allocation and restrictions on sub-grant use under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (“ESEA”). In particular, it would move teacher liability and Internet safety provisions to Title IX (General Provisions) of the ESEA. The bill also would replace Title IV (21st Century Schools) of the ESEA with a new Title IV (Safe and Healthy Students) program, and include requirements for sub-grants for the prevention and reduction of substance abuse, school violence, and bullying and strengthening parent and community involvement in these efforts.

2. Proposed Federal Bills with Reporting Provisions

a) H.R.1648, S. 506: Safe Schools Improvement Act of 2011

This bill was introduced in the House on April 15, 2011 by Rep. Linda Sanchez (California) with 126 co-sponsors and in the Senate on March 8, 2011 by Sen. Robert P. Casey, Jr. (Pennsylvania) with 37 co-sponsors. In the House it was introduced in the Education and the Workforce Committee, and has been referred to Subcommittee on Early Childhood, Elementary, and Secondary Education. In the Senate it was read twice and referred to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

This bill would amend ESEA to require states to collect and report information and statistical data on bullying and harassment and to provide technical assistance to local educational agencies related to bullying prevention.

b) H.R. 975: Anti-Bullying and Harassment Act of 2011

This bill was introduced in the House Education and the Workforce Committee on March 9, 2011 by Rep. Danny Davis (Illinois) with 10 co-sponsors. It has been referred to the Subcommittee on Early Childhood, Elementary, and Secondary Education.

This bill would amend the Safe and Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act to require states to use safe and drug-free schools grants to collect and report information on bullying and harassment and require local educational agencies and schools to use sub-grants for prevention and response measures. The proposed legislation includes annual reporting out to parents on prohibited conduct and requires the establishment of complaint procedures.

C. Pending State Legislation to Amend Existing Anti-Bullying or Other Laws

1. Overview

The state anti-bullying legislative agenda has been and continues to be highly active. There are many pending state bills that would, if enacted, amend existing state anti-bullying laws or create or amend other state laws related to bullying. A number of bills have been introduced by legislators in rapid response to juvenile suicides within their constituencies.²⁵ Given the current landscape, it is likely that there will continue to be a wave of state legislation within the next several years.

The unsettled state of the legislative process in New Jersey may serve as an example for what may take place in other states during the coming year. Passage of the current New Jersey anti-bullying statute was propelled by public outcry over the death of Rutgers University freshman Tyler Clementi.²⁶ Since the statute's implementation in Fall 2011, the Ridgewood and River Vale school districts have filed complaints contesting the constitutionality of new law, claiming that the statute's unfunded requirements for reporting, investigations, and meetings are a "significant drain" on limited school resources.²⁷ At the same time, three amendments to the law were introduced in early January 2012 that if passed would increase the strength of the current law, already considered by some to be one of the toughest state anti-bullying statutes.²⁸

2. Recent Sample Bills

In the past year, there were roughly 112 active bullying-related bills, 41 during the past six months, and 22 in the last thirty days. A few examples of recent pending bills include:

- Florida H.B. 627: Introduced November 10, 2011, referred to House Committee on Education on January 10, 2012: Revising provisions to prohibit bullying through the use of data or computer software that is accessed at a non-school-related location or activity if

III. OTHER STATE AND FEDERAL LAWS POTENTIALLY APPLICABLE TO BULLYING INCIDENTS

A. Constitutional Considerations and Civil Laws

In addition to the anti-bullying laws discussed above, there are a host of Constitutional issues, as well as many federal and state civil laws, that impact the way in which schools address bullying and the types of consequences that students may face. For example:

- The First Amendment, the Fourth Amendment, and the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution place significant limits on public schools’ ability to punish certain speech, to reach speech acts that occur off-campus, to search student property such as computers and cell phones, to engage in investigations, and to discipline students.²⁹
- Federal Civil Rights laws allow private parties to seek monetary damages from federally funded educational institutions (including all public schools) that discriminate on the basis of sex, race, color, national origin, or disability. In 2010 DOE issued a “Dear Colleague” letter addressed to schools, stating that “that some student misconduct that falls under a school’s anti-bullying policy also may trigger responsibilities under one or more of the federal antidiscrimination laws enforced by the Department’s Office for Civil Rights.”³⁰ According

Supp. 2011) (discussing general Fourth Amendment requirements in the educational context); 1 Education Law §§ 2:3, 2:26–27 (Supp. 2009) (discussing First Amendment issues that may be relevant to anti-bullying policy); Naomi Harlin Goodno, How Public Schools Can Constitutionally Halt Cyberbullying: A Model Cyberbullying Policy That Considers First Amendment, Due Process, and Fourth Amendment Challenges, 46 WAKE FOREST L. to DOE, “school districts may violate these civil rights statutes and the Department’s implementing regulations when peer harassment based on race, color, national origin, sex, or disability is sufficiently serious that it creates a hostile environment and such harassment is encouraged, tolerated, not adequately addressed, or ignored by school employees.”³¹ These include:

- Title IX of the Education Amendments Act of 1972,³² which prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex.³³ Student-on-student sexual harassment (and gender-motivated bullying) can form the basis for a damages suit when: (1) the school “acts with deliberate indifference to known acts of harassment,” and (2) the harassment “is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively bars the victim’s access to an educational opportunity or benefit.”³⁴
- Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964,³⁵ which prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, or national origin.³⁶
- Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973³⁷ and Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act,³⁸ which prohibit discrimination on the basis of disabilities.
- State civil rights statutes may carry similar prohibitions, and state tort law may become relevant, particularly in incidents involving violence or suicide.³⁹
- In addition to Section 504 and Title II, the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (“IDEA”) and state law protect students with disabilities.⁴⁰ These include requirements that schools follow students’ Individualized Education Plans in addressing incidents and place limits on how students with disabilities are disciplined.⁴¹ Additionally, under IDEA, a public school’s failure to address bullying directed against a student with disabilities might allow a parent to enroll the child in private school and seek reimbursement from the school district.⁴²
- The federal No Child Left Behind Act has provisions allowing students attending persistently dangerous schools to transfer and requiring zero tolerance policies for firearm possession on campus.⁴³ The federal Safe and Drug Free Schools and Communities Act sets forth criteria for federal funding to support school violence prevention programs.⁴⁴

As this non-exhaustive list makes clear, state anti-bullying laws cannot be looked at in a vacuum. Instead, a host of other legal considerations must be taken into account in developing policies and procedures to address bullying, including the criminal laws discussed below.

B. Federal and State Criminal Laws

1. Overview

A wide range of federal and state criminal laws may make criminal some behaviors that also can be classified as bullying. This includes laws related to stalking, cyberstalking, obscene electronic communications, harassment, assault, battery, preventing or interfering with school attendance, criminal trespass, conversion of property, and many more.⁴⁶ It also includes federal and state child pornography laws and state sexting statutes, which become relevant when incidents involve images of minors.⁴⁷ This document does not examine the circumstances in which prosecuting juveniles under criminal laws in the context of bullying may or may not be appropriate.

2. Hate Crime Laws

Among the various potentially applicable criminal laws, hate crime laws have gained attention in recent years as potentially relevant to the most extreme incidents of bullying. This document does not analyze whether it is ever appropriate to apply hate crime laws to juveniles.

There are both federal and state hate crime laws. The laws vary, but all apply to situations in which an aggressor is motivated by a victim’s special characteristic. A brief description of the statutes follows. For a true understanding of how the laws work, however, they would have to be read in conjunction with federal and/or state cases interpreting them in the context of specific incidents, something beyond the scope of this document.

a) Federal Laws

- 18 U.S.C. § 245, originally enacted at part of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, criminalizes the use of force or threat of force to prevent someone from voting, attending school, seeking employment, and engaging in other federally protected activities based on the person’s “race,

- 18 U.S.C. § 249, the Matthew Shepard and James Byrd, Jr., Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 2009, criminalizes willfully causing bodily injury to any person or, through the use of fire, a firearm, a dangerous weapon, or an explosive or incendiary device, attempting to cause bodily injury:
 - Because of the actual or perceived race, color, religion, or national origin of that person; or
 - Because of the actual or perceived gender, disability, sexual orientation, or gender identity of that person, but only if the acts affect interstate commerce⁴⁸ or take place in the Special Maritime and Territorial Jurisdiction of the United States.

b) State Laws

According to the Anti-Defamation League (“ADL”), as of January 2010, most states and the District of Columbia had enacted hate crimes laws.⁴⁹ Most of those substantially follow the ADL’s model hate crimes provisions,⁵⁰ which increase penalties for existing crimes (such as criminal trespass, criminal mischief, harassment, menacing, intimidation, assault and/or battery) when the perpetrator is motivated by the victim’s race, color, religion, disability, national origin, sexual orientation or gender. The states differ as to which classes they protect. According to the ADL, most include race, religion, and ethnicity, 30 include sexual orientation, 30 include disability, 27 include gender, 13 include age, 12 include transgender or gender identity, and 5 include political affiliation.⁵¹

In addition, according to the ADL as of January 2010, 31 states and the District of Columbia ⁴⁸ While the Supreme Court has held that Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment grants Congress broad power to criminalize discrimination based on race, color, religion, or national origin, the federal legislative authority to criminalize discrimination based on other characteristics such as gender, disability, sexual orientation, and sexual identity is more limited. See 1 RODNEY A. SMOLIA, FEDERAL CIVIL RIGHTS ACTS §§ 1:14, 1:16, 1:18–21 (3d ed. Supp. 2011) (discussing the limits on the Fourteenth Amendment’s “enforcement” power). Accordingly, federal congressional power to enact laws aimed at those classes must come from some other constitutional grant of authority. The Commerce Clause can provide that authority, but only if the activities at issue have more than an attenuated impact on interstate commerce. See United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2000) (holding that civil remedies created by the Violence Against Women Act of 1994 exceeded Congress’s Commerce Clause authority); see generally SMOLIA, supra, at §§ 1:22–24 (discussing the Commerce Clause as a source of civil rights enforcement power). In section 249, the interstate commerce requirement can be met by travel across state lines (by either the victim or perpetrator); using an “instrumentality” of interstate commerce in the commission of the crime; or using a dangerous weapon that has crossed state lines. 18 U.S.C. § 249(a)(2)(B) (West 2011).

explicitly provided victims of hate crimes with the option to pursue civil suits.⁵²

CONCLUSION

The legal landscape surrounding bullying is still new and evolving. The laws that currently exist on the whole place responsibility for preventing and responding to bullying on schools. They also set out institutional arrangements for bullying policy among state agencies, school districts, and schools. The anti-bullying laws, however, cannot be considered in a vacuum. There are a host of Constitutional considerations, as well as civil and criminal laws and regulations, that must be taken into account when responding to bullying. At the same time, law plays an important but partial role in addressing bullying. Legal responses and mandates can at their best only facilitate the harder non-legal work that schools must undertake to create a kinder, braver world.

⁵² Many of these provisions are based on the ADL model provision, which provides that “the parent(s) or legal guardian(s) of any unemancipated minor shall be liable for any judgment rendered against such minor under this Section.” Text of ADL Model Legislation, supra note 50.
